Microsoft Discloses Customer Hack

Worker's computer compromised by SolarWinds hackers, the company says

By Robert McMillan

Microsoft Corp. said hackers, linked by U.S. authorities to Russia's Foreign Intelligence Service, installed malicious information-stealing software on one of its systems and used information gleaned there to attack its customers.

The hackers compromised a computer used by a Microsoft customer-support employee that could have provided access to different types of information, including "metadata" of 36 countries. accounts and billing contact information for the organization, a Microsoft spokesman said.

Microsoft is aware of three customers that were affected by the recent activity, the company said in a blog post. "The actor used this information in some cases to launch highly-targeted attacks as part of their broader campaign," Microsoft said. "We responded quickly, removed the access and secured the device."

The incident was part of a campaign—which involved other hacking techniques beyond leveraging the information taken from its support system-that primarily targeted technology companies and government agencies in

Most of the attacks were unsuccessful, but three of Microsoft's customers were compromised during the campaign, the company said. "We have confirmed that two of the compromises were unrelated to the support agent issue, and are continuing to investigate the third instance," a Microsoft spokesman said.

Microsoft identified the hackers behind the break-in as Nobelium, the same group associated with the sophisticated hack at Austin, Texas, software maker SolarWinds Corp. U.S. authorities have said this group is part of Russia's Foreign Intelligence Service, known as the SVR. Russia has denied involveRussian embassy representative didn't return a message seeking comment on Microsoft's post.

The incident marks the second time in recent months that Russia-linked hackers have breached Microsoft's networks. In December, Microsoft said Nobelium hackers broke into the company's networks to view internal source code, used to build software products.

The U.S. Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Security Agency is "aware of this activity and is working with Microsoft and our interagency partners to evaluate the impact," said a spokesman for the Department of Homeland Security, which oversees the agency. "We stand ment in the SolarWinds hack. A ready to assist any affected entities." He declined to say whether government agencies were hit by the hack.

The breaches at Microsoft and SolarWinds have raised concerns among government and industry security professionals that Russian hackers are engaged in a longstanding and concerted effort to break into U.S. technology companies and use them as a back door into government and commercial targets, a tactic known as a 'supply-chain attack."

About 100 companies and at least nine government agencies are known to have been compromised during the Solar-Winds attack, which went undetected for months before it was discovered this past fall.

"The latest cyberattack reported by Microsoft does not involve our company or our customers in any way," a Solar-Winds spokesman said.

In April, the Biden administration unveiled a series of sanctions against Russia citing, among other things, the Solar-Winds cyberattack. Russia has denounced the sanctions.

Since then, the Russianlinked hackers have made it clear that they intend to continue their activity. In May, Microsoft said it discovered that the hackers were involved in a phishing campaign that targeted 3,000 email accounts belonging to workers at more than 150 organizations.

Venmo Plans to Charge Users for Selling Goods and Services

By Charity L. Scott

Venmo, the payments app owned by PayPal Holdings Inc., will soon let users sell products and services on their personal accounts, for a fee.

Under the app's previous rules, users were prohibited from receiving money for business transactions through personal Venmo profiles. Users suspected of violating the policy could have their accounts suspended.

The new policy, disclosed in a letter to users about termsof-service updates, will take effect on July 20.

the latest changes mean users who don't want to create a business profile will be allowed to accept money for goods and services without worrying about running afoul of the rules. They will be charged the same 1.9% plus 10cent fee applied to customers using business profiles.

The change is the latest attempt by PayPal to profit from Venmo's user base. The company rolled out the first Venmo-branded credit card last year, looking to attract customers by touting the QR code on the front of the card.

A Venmo spokeswoman said and a flexible cash-back rewards program.

Venmo is one of the most popular digital-finance apps in the U.S. It gained even more users during the pandemic as new services-such as allowing for the direct deposit of stimulus checks into Venmo accounts—more than offset fewer people using the app to split bar and restaurant bills.

PayPal Chief Executive Dan Schulman said during an earnings call in February that Venmo's user base increased 32% in 2020 to nearly 70 million active accounts. About $51 billion was transferred via

63% increase from a year earlier. PayPal expects Venmo to generate nearly $900 million in revenue in 2021.

Thursday's announcement was met online with confusion from customers who didn't un-

Venmo in the first quarter, a derstand how the app would determine which transactions should be charged the fee. Some speculated the company would use the messages people add to their payments to figure out if the money was for a business transaction.

Venmo will add a toggle to its user interface that will allow customers to indicate if the money they are sending is for a good or service, a comspokeswoman said. Those transactions will be eligible for the app's purchase protection plan, which allows customers to dispute charges for purchases that don't arrive or aren't as expected, she said. The transaction fee will be automatically deducted from the amount sent.

Joe Johnson, a 58-year-old fitness trainer who owns a training facility in Nashville, Tenn., uses Venmo to receive payments from clients and to pay his contract workers. He estimates at least 80% of his customers pay through Venmo, and he receives several payments through the app each day. "I take Cash App, Zelle, credit cards, checks, cash-however people want to pay," he said. "But Venmo rules right now."
